Hewlett Packard has released HP Smart Array Advanced Pack 2.0 that is a part of the base features for the HPE Smart Array P624 Controller. Q: Entity framework should I load a complex object graph into memory on every page view? I have this code: // Create a new lead // Add it to the database var dbLead = new Lead { //... } // Mark the lead as viewed dbLead.MarkAsViewed(); // Insert it into the view dbContext.Leads.InsertOnSubmit(dbLead); dbContext.SubmitChanges(); // Return some part of the view // Use dbLead here... Is it a good idea to load the dbLead before use, and if so, why? Is it going to cause problems? A: It is not a good idea to load the object graph every time you're using it. The advantage is that it will reduce the size of the memory that you're sharing between all the other running processes, so that your app will be more responsive. You don't need to return a whole Lead object - you can return some property of it, in particular, the Id field. DC Games Given the tremendous success of Batman: Arkham City, it comes as no surprise that a sequel is just around the corner. Arkham Origins is a prequel to the Arkham series, and in it, you get to play as The Joker, complete with the clown make up and a whole lotta crazy. You also get to play as The Penguin, Harley Quinn, Hugo Strange and Catwoman, and there are a lot of them. It's mostly a straight Batman game, but there's also an Arkham Origins: Blackgate expansion which brings a few more villains in. A 6% rise on results this afternoon, gamers really want to get their hands on the Tomb Raider reboot right now. Lara Croft has some big shoes to fill in this new series, with the Spanish and Australian release on April 5th, and with every potential sales week between now and then. DC Comics and Warner Bros. have officially announced a Superman vs. Batman fighting game. It is being developed by Armature Studio with assistance from DC Comics, and will arrive for consoles, PC, Wii, Xbox 360, and PlayStation 3. The game features four playable characters with their own signature special abilities: Superman, Batman
